

Fact Sheet: Parents Caring for Adult Children Need Access to Paid Leave

No one should have to choose between caring for their loved ones and maintaining their economic security, but many parents of adult children are forced to make that impossible choice when their children need care. Many young adults, in particular, depend on their parents for care when they are sick or managing a disability. Parents need paid sick time and paid family and medical leave laws that use expansive and inclusive language to ensure that they can care for their children in times of need.

Adult Children Increasingly Rely on Parental Care

- Many young adults continue to rely on their parents for care. In 2022, 55.8 percent of men and 53.6 percent of women between the ages of 18-24 lived in the same household as their parents.ⁱ
- Young adults who are single are more likely to continue to live and rely on their parents into adulthood.ⁱⁱ The number of single adults has increased throughout the years, making it so that more adults are relying on their parents as their main support system.
- Since the 2008 recession, there has been a steady increase in young adults relying on their parents for financial assistance.ⁱⁱⁱ
- Young adults are also increasingly facing mental health challenges.^{iv} Often, due to a lack of available professional support, these adults need parental support to aid them in these challenges. Further, young adults often rely on their parents to assist them in seeking out professional support and receiving diagnostic evaluations.^v

Adult Children with Disabilities Rely on Parental Care

- An estimated 3 million young adults, between the ages of 14-24 live with some type of disability.^{vi}
- Around 50 percent of children with disabilities continue to live with their parents into their adult life. Of the adult children with disabilities who live outside of the home, 44 percent of parents still devote significant time to assisting with daily tasks such as money management, transportation, and shopping.^{vii} Oftentimes parental caregivers will not only assist with daily tasks, but also complex medical tasks. This can include things such as medication monitoring, infusion therapy, tube feeding, vital monitoring, etc.^{viii}
- Many parents of adults with disabilities have low rates of social participation, likely due to the fact that they have limited discretionary time and their caregiving responsibilities can impact their own health. Finding appropriate care for their children and managing the demands of caregiving alongside other responsibilities is exceedingly time-consuming. This leaves these parents with little support, impacting both their mental and physical health, resulting in higher levels of anxiety and physical pain affecting daily routines.^{ix}

Parents who Care for Adult Children Have Their Own Care Needs

- Even among adult children who do not live with their parents, a significant number still rely on them for caregiving needs. Oftentimes parents must balance caring for their adult children with their work responsibilities. Balancing both roles can be challenging.^x

- Caring for adult children can also take a financial toll on parents. Forty-five percent of parents still provide financial support for at least one adult child. Among these parents, the average monthly expense to provide this support was $1,400.^{xi}
- Sixty-two percent of older adults do not receive any financial support to help care for a family member. Twenty-one percent are concerned with their ability to retire.^{xii}
- The challenges posed by caring for adult children, especially without needed support, are not only financial. Forty-eight percent of older caregivers reported feeling stressed or overwhelmed by their caregiving duties and twenty-six percent have stated that their own health has been negatively affected.^{xiii}
- Studies have shown that when a family member has serious health concerns, it affects the mental health and well-being of the immediate surrounding family members. Parents with older children, who have serious health conditions, reported a higher feeling of psychological distress than parents with younger children.^{xiv}

Importance on Paid Leave for Parental Caregivers

- Paid leave laws are essential for individuals to take care of themselves and their loved ones without putting their economic security at risk.
- These paid leave laws can help parents balance their jobs and provide care for their adult children. Additionally, paid leave laws allow parents to take care of themselves if any healthcare concerns arise from their caregiving responsibilities.
- Paid leave laws need to be more inclusive, allowing parents to not only care for their adult children with disabilities, but also their adult children who rely on them for care and support.

ⁱ US Census Bureau, Historical living arrangements of adults Census.gov (2022), <https://www.census.gov/data/tables/time-series/demo/families/adults.html>. Table AD-3 ⁱⁱ Kahn, J.R., Goldscheider, F. & García-Manglano, J. Growing Parental Economic Power in Parent–Adult Child Huseholds: Coresidence and Financial Dependency in the United States, 1960–2010. Demography 50, 1449–1475 (2013). <https://doi.org/10.1007/s13524-013-0196-2>

ⁱⁱⁱ Id.

^{iv} Mental illness, National Institute of Mental Health (2023), <https://www.nimh.nih.gov/health/statistics/mental-illness>.

^v Id.

^{vi} Cheng, L., & Shaewitz, D. (2021). The 2021 youth transition report: Outcomes for youth and young adults with disabilities. Washington, DC: Institute for Educational Leadership.

^{vii} Subharati Ghosh, Jan S Greenberg & Marsha Mailick Seltzer, Adaptation to a spouse’s disability by parents of adult children with mental illness or developmental disability Psychiatric services (Washington, D.C.) (2012), <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC3593059/>.

^{viii} Richard Schulz & Connie A. Tompkins, Informal caregivers in the United States: Prevalence, caregiver ... National Library of Medicine (2010), <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/books/NBK210048/>.

^{ix} Srishti Dang et al., Exploring the needs of spousal, adult child, and adult sibling informal caregivers: A mixed-method systematic review Frontiers in psychology (2022), <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC8992373/>.

^x Id.

^{xi} Beth Klongpayabal, 45 percent of parents still cover costs for their adult children Savings.com (2023), <https://www.savings.com/insights/financial-support-for-adult-children-study>.

^{xii} Nationwide, Caught in the middle: Today’s older adults are caring for adult children and aging parents PR Newswire: press release distribution, targeting, monitoring and marketing (2019), <https://www.prnewswire.com/news-releases/caught-in-the-middle-todays-older-adults-are-caring-for-adult-children-and-aging-parents-300939105.html>.

^{xiii} Id.

^{xiv} Megan Gilligan et al., Adult children’s serious health conditions and the flow of support between the generations OUP Academic (2015), https://academic.oup.com/gerontologist/article/57/2/179/2631893#google_vignette.